Refugee Circle Content Feedback -

Report Type	Moment-in-time report
Purpose	Can pages with a narrative about Kiva's refugee program (and no mention of loan choice) hook diaspora communities and faith-based givers?
Insight	All of these pages helped users understand Kiva's mission and the problem we are solving when we lend to refugees. Pages that explicitly mentioned financial inclusion raised questions about lending that other pages did not.

Overview

Objective

Which design is most likely to convert users if we made a live version for WRD and drove traffic from diaspora communities and faith-based givers?

- Can we compete with major refugee charities if we don't lead with choice/ the granularity of Marketplace?
- If a user reads the whole page, what information do they need to see to perceive Kiva as impactful and trustworthy?

In this study

- We compared 4 prototypes that emphasized different aspects of Kiva and how we support refugees. None of these pages offered borrower choice, and are examples of what an early donate-to-lend solution might look like outside of the context of user-led fundraisers.
- We tested these pages with faith-based givers and immigrants living in the US. These communities were identified in a quick brainstorm around audiences who 1) are likely to care about refugees and 2) are likely to give larger amounts.
